I. GENERAL

In order to realise steadily growing, inclusive and sustainable national economy, with the ultimate goal to deliver economic and social prosperity to all the people, as well as to wisely protect and manage Environment in Indonesia, the economic development must prioritise the harmony between economic, social and Environmental aspects. That is, because otherwise a development targeting sheer economic growth will lead to social inequality and deteriorating Environmental quality, along with all the implications.

To achieve such steadily growing, inclusive and sustainable national economy, it is imperative that support be rallied to prevent against financing or investment practices contributing to business activities that involve excessive use of natural resources, increase social inequality and lead to the destruction of Environment.

The said financial system must apply sustainable principles capable of establishing economic, social and ecologic values in models, processes and practices at the level of business policy and decision making towards financial system stability and business success in the long run by keeping contribution to the achievement of sustainable development goals including guarantee of Environmental integrity, as well as the current and future generations' safety, capacity, prosperity and life quality.

As a developing country, Indonesia faces social inequality issues worth appropriate concern. In addition, Indonesia is also a country geographically exposed to climate change risks. Therefore, the better management of and prevention against social and environmental risks is needed.

Application of Sustainable Finance to Indonesian financial institution system is the implementation of Law 32 of 2009 on Environmental Protection and Management to develop and apply environmentally aware economic instruments including Environmentally friendly policies in the sectors of banking, capital market and non-bank financial industry.

The commitment to implementing Sustainable Finance has been established through the launching of Sustainable Finance Roadmap in December 2014.

Sustainable Finance regulations are the answer to how all financial services or FSI stakeholders will make commitment and implement concrete actions to endeavour the implementation of sustainable development in Indonesia.
